BLACK OXFORDS

By Mack Sennett ✓

MAY 28 1924 ✓

A wayward youth has left his home and landed in jail and when an opportunity to escape arises, he does so followed shortly after, by an old time offender who manages to escape at the same time. The efforts to elude the officers of the law are made quite humorous by the incidents that ensue. The wayward son finally reaches home in time to prevent the mortgage from being foreclosed and bringing to justice the real offender and guilty one of the crime for which the wayward son had been sent to jail.
